

CAMILLE LAVILLE

Economist (PhD) | Conflict, climate and natural resources in fragile states

Paris, France | laville.ecodef@gmail.com | <https://lavillecamille.netlify.app/>

RESEARCH

I study the structural causes of internal conflict, and how land, climate and natural resources shape both conflict and peace in fragile states. I combine quantitative methods (spatial econometrics, satellite and geolocated event data, meta-analysis) with fieldwork alongside national research partners, mainly in the Sahel and Central Africa, and also in the Middle East and the Pacific. My work sits between conflict economics and applied policy research.

QUESTIONS I WORK ON

- What drives internal conflict, and what do our conflict data actually measure? PhD thesis; Revue française d'économie (2019); Journal of Peace Research (2025).
- How do access to land and its governance shape both conflict and resilience in drylands? Cross-border transhumance between Niger and Nigeria; Sudanese refugee women in eastern Chad; the JASS programme in Mali and Niger.
- How do conflict, displacement and environmental degradation compound each other in protracted crises? Eastern DRC, Yemen, Syria, Papua New Guinea.
- Who carries climate risk, and who gets climate finance? Chad's climate-finance readiness; risk sharing in World Bank projects; Japan's bilateral climate finance.

Quantitative and qualitative methods. Applied macroeconomics (local projections) and microeconomics (spatial panel econometrics combining satellite rasters and geolocated conflict events); meta-regression analysis (publication-bias identification and correction in econometrics literature); demographic scenario building; focus groups, factorial vignettes and participatory workshops.
